Short & Sweet

Hi Everyone!

Today, I am wondering about this so-called global warming situation. For our RAMY (Rochester Area Mensa Youth) outing, we went to the Planetarium. The subject was the health of the coral reefs. The temperature of the ocean around the reefs has raised by about two degrees. This doesn't seem like it should be a problem, but ALL of the life interconnected with the reefs is suffering. It sort of reminds me of dominoes; if one life form changes, it affects all of the other life forms around it.

Another puzzling thing to me is that cicadas started their evening "song" about one month ago. Normally, we don't hear them until later in the summer – What is the deal!? I never go into a panic about things, but there DOES seem to be a connection between the health of our environment and our climate.

I realize that a lot of people (I used to be one of them) think that the response to the global warming issue is an overreaction. I do find myself wondering how wise it is to just ignore the whole potential problem.

Throughout history we have learned far too many times that ignoring something does not usually end up well! This is true for both human beings (Hitler, for example) as well as nature (the destruction of the rain forest). So, here is my question to everyone: If we are to address this concern, where and how do we start – Any suggestions or ideas!? Come on guys, we weren't given impressive brains to just stand around looking overwhelmed! Think of it as a problem to solve. For example, if we started by replenishing the rain forest that in itself would help for a number of reasons! Believe it or not, even the coral reefs would be affected by this move towards conservation.

Mankind can be extremely selfish; we were not given the world to destroy it and take everything we wanted! I like the sentiment that we are only borrowing this planet from our children. Please act accordingly! Individual actions and decisions can have impact on the situation. Perhaps if we focus only on the things that WE can change, the task won't be so scary...

Hope to see you soon,

Julie Stout,

RAM LocSec

How to Find Willowbrook Road

For our Sunday, May 19th hiking expedition, we will be starting from Willowbrook Road between High Street and Rowley Road, and more specifically, just east of the NYS Thruway underpass. (Willowbrook passes under the Thruway.)

Best access is probably by way of Rowley Road, which both starts and ends on Route 96: On the west end it is opposite Main Street Fishers, on the east it is the first road west of India House on the opposite side. So from either direction, Route 96 to Rowley, turn on to Willowbrook and proceed to a point just beyond the Thruway underpass. The trail winds through the hills behind WalMart and Kohl's
